REACH THE SPOT.

To cure an aching back, The pains of rheumatism, The tired-out feelings, You must reach the spot—get at the cause.

In most cases 'tis the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys.

Charles Bierbach, stone contractor, living at 2325 Chestnut St., Erie, Pa., says: "For two years I had kidney trouble, and there was such a severe pain through my loins and limbs that I could not stoop or straighten up without great pain, had difficulty in getting about and was unable to rest at night, arising in the morning tired and worn out. The kidney secretions were irregular and deposited a heavy sediment. Doctors treated me for rheumatism, but failed to help me. I lost all confidence in medicine, but Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me so quickly and so thoroughly that I gladly made a statement to that effect for publication. This was in 1898, and during the six years which have elapsed I have never known Doan's Kidney Pills to fail."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Bierbach will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address: Foster-McLure Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price, 50 cents per box.

Only a Minute.

Only a minute, but just sixty seconds, Only a minute to spare, Not very much time, but marking ever reckons To lighten the world's load of care; In only a minute a life may be saved, It takes but a minute from sleep to awaken, A minute to leave our loved in the grave.

Only a minute to snatch from our lives, To comfort a child, or to brighten old age, While the hours that are wasted in folly and worry.

And discord, alas would fill many a page; We've hours to spare at the summons of Pleasure. While minutes to duty are grudgingly given, With time worse than wasted, we talk of the future.

And toward, that awaits our arrival in Heaven. From Time to Eternity's only a minute, We live steadily, and the sands of Time fall, If a task is awaiting, you better begin it, Ere the last of your minutes are gone past.

Only a minute, but if each one was freighted With time worse than wasted, we talk of the future. We'd not wait to wait for a Heaven belated, 'Twould be Heaven too late and Eternity too.

CORA M. W. GREENLEAF.

The Graduates.

An ode she wrote to cheer her classmates' part. It spoke a clarion call to noble deeds, Blue skies, bright stars, and happy days, And glorious hopes of a future splendid.

He wrote of high, uplifting tone; 'Twas all about to keep his day of shame; It said man should not live by bread alone, And all his comrades give him great acclaim.

L'Envoi.

Spare the Wild Flowers.

An Appeal to Those Who Destroy Because They Do Not Think.

This is the season of the year when dwellers in cities and towns may be seen returning after holiday excursions, loaded down with flowers, leaves and branches of trees, torn off from their stems by people who wish to carry away the beauties of the woods and fields.

It is not uncommon to see people coming from the country laden with branches of dogwood for example, four feet long; roses are torn down and defaced, and bunches of beautiful flowers like violets, buttercups and others are wilting in every hand. If people would recognize how fleeting is that gratification derived from this destruction of the flowers, and how selfish it is, they probably would not be guilty of it.

The Sheep Industry.

More Sheep Should Be Kept on New England Farms.

East of the great range section of our country we have only one-third as many sheep on our farms as we formerly had. In my old State we are annually losing $1,500,000 that might be ours if we had kept up our flocks. The loss is relatively greater in many other States. That this is a total loss is evident from the fact that our farms are capable of supporting all the stock we now carry and our former flocks of sheep besides. I maintain that the fertility brought to the farms by the sheep would so improve them that the whole income from the sheep might be regarded as clear gain to our farm industry.

One of the evils against which our flock masters have had to contend has been the dog nuisance. Legislators have repeatedly tried to find some law that would be effective against the evil, but thus far, the dog has had more protection than the sheep and the evil still remains. That it is one of the great obstacles in the way of increasing our flocks is abundantly proved by the statement of those farmers who say they would keep sheep if it wasn't for the dogs. To my mind there appears only one way of solving the problem—recognize the dog as the lawful property of its owner and compel the owner to keep his dog under strict control. If this cannot be done then the alternative is to kill the dog. It is certainly true that there are many thousand worthless dogs, "both mongrel, puppy, whelp and hound," "both mongrel, puppy, whelp and hound," which are a constant menace to the sheep industry.

Then, the question of fences is an important one. We do not have the available supply of forest fencing that our forefathers had. To fasten the wire, the best substitute and find that expensive, and unsatisfactory as a sheep fence. We cannot afford to fence large pastures for small flocks as people used to do. We must learn different methods and fence more sheep on large flocks. Instead of pasturing 100 acres with 40 sheep, we must learn to feed as many on 10 acres. With the cheapening of woven wire fencing there will be no great difficulty in making needed fences to restrain the flocks. The cost of sheep is unlike her ancestors in some respects. She can be confined on small areas and kept at a profit. One of our most successful sheepmen recommends that flocks be pastured at the rate of four sheep an acre.

There is no question to-day in regard to the possible profit from sheep. In fact, there has never been a decade in which the profit from the flocks would not average up well with the profit from other kinds of stock.

There is another reason for this lack of interest in sheep—a reason that has been so insidious in its work that we have raised it only when the effect has been felt.

The several State organizations, the writers for the farm papers, the institute workers, and, in some cases, the experiment stations have neglected the sheep industry. The great increase in dairying has been brought about by the combined forces of nearly all agricultural workers. I find no fault with this. It is right and the work should be continued, but it is a case of "this ought to be done and not left the other undone."

Had the same effort and the same amount of thought and study been given to the sheep that have been given to dairying, the sheep industry would have been a success. There are many farms better adapted to sheep farming than to dairying; there are many of our farmers who could make a success of the work if they would only apply themselves to the business in an intelligent, energetic manner. The methods of work that answered in the past are not the ones to be used to-day. We are in a transition state. We are passing away from the old and learning the new. Competition in all lines of work has become so keen that we are obliged to study our business as never before, and it may be safely said that in the years to come success is to come only to the man who prepares for it. The highest profit in any branch of farming is obtained only by getting above the average. It is every man's privilege to get above the average, if he can, and thus increase the value of his flocks and farm.

It would be folly to advise everybody to keep sheep, but there is good money in them for those who are adapted to the business. With only one-third as many sheep upon our farms as we once had, with our farms understocked and losing in fertility, with our incomes below good business standards and our needs increasing, we may well pause and ask ourselves if we cannot work out our own salvation with the aid of the sheep.

Take Time To Eat.

Harry at Meals Will Send You to Noyes Drug Store for M-i-o-n-a Stomach Tablets.

"Eat in haste and repent at leisure" is an old saying brought to date. Hurry at breakfast means a bad start in the day, and if you hurry also at the other meals, you will soon suffer with loss of appetite, sleeplessness, nervousness, furred tongue, specks before the eyes, headaches, back-aches, weakness and debility, indigestion, or other ailments that are caused by an abused stomach.

Here in Norway, as in thousands of other places over the country, hurry at meals increases the druggist's business. Not a day passes that Noyes Drug Store does not sell several packages of M-i-o-n-a stomach tablets to those who have ruined their digestion by not taking time to eat.

Of course indigestion has many other causes, but whatever the cause, the remedy is the same, M-i-o-n-a. It cures any acidities there may be, increases the flow of the gastric juices, and actually gives strength and tone to the whole digestive system, so that you can soon eat anything at any time without fear of indigestion. Noyes Drug Store has seen so many cures made by M-i-o-n-a that they can under an absolute guarantee that it will be successful in every case where it is used in accordance with directions, that is, one tablet before each meal, and will refund the money to anyone whom it does not help. A large box of M-i-o-n-a tablets costs but 50c if it cures; nothing if it fails.

Should Daughter Go out to Work

When a girl has finished her schooling and arrived at years of comparative maturity, is it best for her to remain at home, making herself useful about the house, or should she seek some kind of work outside?

This is a question by which many families are confronted and by which they are apt to be somewhat perplexed. Of course, there are cases which do not admit of doubt. Where the father's income is inadequate or only barely sufficient for the comfortable support of those who are dependent upon it, there can seldom be much room for hesitation. As he has spent a large part of what he has made in rearing his children he has probably arrived at middle age without having been able to set much aside for his declining days, and where that is the case it is clearly the duty, and it will nearly always be the desire of his sons and daughters alike, to assume the burden of his maintenance, so that during his remaining period of productivity he may be able to save as large a proportion as possible of his profits or earnings against the contingencies of the future. Under those circumstances the daughter will seek some remunerative employment as a matter not of inclination but of duty.

But suppose the case where the father is in a position to keep his family in comfort and to provide for his own future as well, suppose the daughter is in no necessity whatever to labor for her bread, but is entirely free to make her own choice so far as any financial constraint is concerned, what then would be the wisest thing for her to do? It is difficult to lay down a rule which shall be of universal application, because so much depends upon particular conditions, but it may be said without much danger of going far astray that the girl who leaves the shelter of the home for the turmoil of the market, places herself for the purpose of obtaining a little more pocket money, or of enabling herself to dress a little better than would otherwise be practical, therein makes a mistake, which, before all is over, she may expect to have cause to regret.

There are several reasons which might be given in justification of this opinion. One of them is that the young woman who does not need to work in competition with others has no moral right to do so, because she inevitably takes the place of some one else to whom wages are a necessity. Moreover, as she is free from the obligation of supplying her own wants she can afford to accept a less than living rate of pay, and thus, by becoming a voluntary worker, she does those an injury who are compelled to work in order to provide themselves with the means of subsistence.

These are days in which great stress is laid upon the rights of the individual, and it will be argued that the young woman in question is at liberty to pursue her own interests, or what she conceives to be her own interests, without any regard to the welfare of others. In a limited sense this is true; the law allows her that privilege.

But none of us living in a state of civilization are really free, that is in morals and religion, to direct our course by merely selfish considerations. We are bound to pay some regard to the rights of the community, because to the community we are indebted for most of the comforts and conveniences we enjoy. The very basis of civilization is co-operation, and its progress depends upon our all working together for the common good. The principle of individualism, that is every one for himself and the devil take the hindmost, has been carried too far. It dominated the nineteenth century, but one need not be much of a prophet to foresee that during the century now current the contrary principle of collectivism will come to the front and profoundly modify the activities of existence.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that for the young woman who doesn't have to work for wages, home is the best place.

Palms and Ferns in Summer.
Palms and ferns need much summer care. Usually during the summer there is a necessity for free ventilation. This summer few warm nights have relieved this necessity in its fullest degree. Nevertheless, some is necessary. Without it there is too much condensed moisture on the foliage for the welfare of the plants, and the growth is in danger of becoming soft and drawn.

Careful watering should be indulged in this season, for there are so many cloudy days, with the induced humidity of the atmosphere, in which the plants do not dry out so rapidly as may be expected in the early summer. Under such conditions fungoid troubles are likely to appear. This is particularly true of greenhouses, for there is to be found more or less rotten wood, and as a matter of prevention it is well to sprinkle slacked lime under the benches or among the plants.

Fresh air will prove quite effective. A little fire heat and free ventilation should be accorded during a long spell of cool and damp weather, for these will make greater improvements in atmospheric conditions than any other method.

Over-stimulation for palms produces brittle foliage that is not well adapted for the uses of the decorator.

A tedious operation is the potting and handling of seedling ferns, says authority on plant life. It is far more trouble, even to the experienced, to pot these small and tender plants than to care for a lot of rooted cuttings of ordinary character, and the day will not close with the same amount accomplished.

It is not heavy work, though, and with reasonable care these should not be much less after the seedlings are potted, that is, if they are not exposed to the air too long while on the potting bench and are watered in and protected from the sun and wind until they become established.

The Soldier.
A letter from Charles H. Clark of Paris, once a soldier, now an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Togus, says old soldiers are dying fast, should think on an average of one a day. Only a short time ago there died in one day three men in the ward where he is living. There is a man there one hundred years old and many ninety and over.

Commencement exercises will be held at Bowdoin college, June 24-28. A stophy, presented by an alumnus, will be awarded the class, prior to that of the present year, which has the largest percentage of living members in attendance.

Of course fly fishermen at the great lakes do not fish with bait. (We mean the real, solid, non-liquid kind.) They initiated however own up to jacking the lowly earth worms. Why do they do them?

June and the Apple Trees.

If the apple trees were as scarce as magnolias we should prize their beauty laden boughs at something like their real worth. Just now the country is bursting into bloom, the many hued flowers surprising us with their loveliness and fragrance. Old orchards, upon the few remaining deserted farms, are preparing to vie with the highly cultivated nurseries of the fruit farms near to the market towns, and in less than a week all Maine will be ablaze with the floral glory that comes once each year.

Man must be spiritually buried indeed who can ride at this time of year and not be moved by the decorations which Dame Nature has prepared for his entertainment and enjoyment. He can be possessed of but little imagination if he does not conjecture and question to himself what greetings will the flaming yellow dandelion bring him, the blossoms of the apple trees smile, and blush, and bow in return. He must be intensely practical if he can look ahead over the fleeting summer months, and see the fruiting of the harvest, fancy the red of the ripening apples in place of the delicate pinks and whites which are now so conspicuous to every observer.

It would not be wise, we suppose, to agitate for the enactment of a law compelling all men and women to shut up their houses, their shops, their offices, their dingy factories and dimly lighted offices, and adjourn to "out of doors" for the next 80 days. Without any statute upon the subject any man or woman who fails to save from the necessities, to make the most of June in the country, and out of doors at that, commits a crime against his own interests. We are aware that practical reasons operate to keep back the tide of tourists' travel until after the schools close, but if these parents and school superintendents did but know the school is no place for a child in June. He should be romping with the birds, chasing butterflies, tramping pastures and fishing brooks. If there is a time of year best adapted to getting out into the open air it is in June.

We are sure that if the tourists who enjoy Maine summers so much had any idea of the beauty they are missing by not being visitors during the blossoming of the apple trees and the blossoms of the birds and blossoms they would make it in their way to come earlier, if they did not stay later. But however it may be with the tourists those of us who are so fortunate as to have homes here may manage to take some hours every week for a little excursion countryward, to get a whiff of the perfume which is every where, to see the gorgeous settings of the gardens and orchards, and get out into the fresh air for a part of the time into the spiritual realm. Such another chance will not come before another June arrives. The trolly lines invite and they who are wise will hasten to accept, deeming to spend all these precious hours in duty. Get off the pavement on to the sod, and then complain to us if you don't like the change. Remember that spiritual teachers of the present age are pretty much agreed that beauty, in whatever form it is presented, is the doorway to the earthy. Luxuriate in it while it is present in such superabundance, and see if you are not better men and women therefore.

Calls It a Whopper.

In regard to the story recently published in the papers about Mrs. Rebecca Warren of Norway, being the woman who introduced the navel oranges from California to the East, a California paper says: "Nobody here seems ever to have heard of this Mrs. Warren and her eleventh hour claim to the fame in connection with the navel orange. It is a well-established historical fact that the first navel was grown in Riverside by Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Tibbets from two trees sent to them by the Department of Agriculture. And both of these trees are growing in Riverside today. The story of Mrs. Warren's having purchased roots of navel trees in San Francisco and of her selling buds from them is the wildest pipe dream ever. There never was a navel tree grown within 100 miles of San Francisco and the buds from the original trees were all distributed from Riverside. We shall have to be 'shown' a whole lot to induce us to take any stock whatever in this yarn from the hills of Oxford county Maine.

The above clipping was sent us by E. A. Chase, president of The Chase Nursery Company of Riverside, Cal. He writes:—I was born among the Oxford hills, and it is hard to believe that such a whopper could generate from my own beautiful part of the world."

If anyone knows that the story of Mrs. Warren is true we would be pleased to publish it. If it is a piece of pure imagination we would also be pleased to publish the name of the author. The Advertiser would like to get at the facts of the story.

It Costs More to Prepare the Surface

than to do the repainting itself, if the original paint was not Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. This is the only paint which is elastic enough and tough enough, in spite of climatic changes, to wear smoothly and evenly right down to the surface, leaving it free and uniform, all ready for the painter to begin his work when repainting is finally necessary.

A paint adulterated with barytes, yellow ochre, zinc and other substitutes for Pure White Lead, is inevitably stiff and brittle; and changes in temperature make it blister, crack and peel. Long before such paint has worn away, repainting becomes a necessity, on account of the many places left exposed. Yet, before repainting can be done, the blotchy, uneven surface must be scraped or burned till the smooth surface of the wood itself is reached. This requires much of the painter's valuable time, and is attended with no little risk from fire.

Avoid this expensive process and the danger which it always involves, by insisting on Pure White Lead in the first place. Don't leave any loophole; specify the brand: RED SEAL

HARRISON.
In Memoriam.
Zebulon J. Abbott was born in Harrison, August, 1829, and died May 26th, 1906, in his 77th year. He resided in Waterford for a number of years but for the last 10 years his home was in his native town. In his early life he engaged in the milling business, but later devoted himself to farming, until increasing years led him to give up the arduous labor and make his home in Harrison.

For the last year he has been in failing health and for the last three months of his life he was confined to his bed, suffering much, yet bearing all with great patience and fortitude.

He was a man of honest integrity, exemplifying Christian principles in all his dealings. He was highly respected in the community and heartily liked by all, and had many true friends. There remain to mourn his loss a wife, a son, a daughter, two brothers and three sisters.

Funeral services were conducted at his late home by Rev. Mabel C. Andrews, pastor of the Free Baptist church. The house was filled to overflowing with old friends and neighbors. The floral tributes were lovely and a quartette beautifully rendered "Gates Ajar," and "Nearer My God to Thee," the latter having been a favorite hymn with the deceased.

The earth and trees are beautifully clothed in green but what a distasteful and slovenly sight to see along the way many trees loaded down with caterpillars.

FORESTS and Stream Flow.
 In considering the relation of forests to stream flow James W. Tourney expresses the opinion that, although the forest may have, on the whole, but little appreciable effect in increasing the rainfall and the annual run-off, its economic importance in regulating the flow of streams is beyond computation. The great indirect value of the forest is the effect which it has in preventing wind and water erosion, thus allowing the soil on hills and mountains to remain in place and in being formed and in other ways providing an adequate absorbing medium for the water of the country. It is the amount of water that passes into the soil, not the amount of rainfall, that makes a region garden or desert.

Enjoying June.

"Do you enjoy good health?" Asked a sympathetic friend of a crabbed old doctor.

"Yes, who don't?"
 But however it may be with good health, there can be no doubt that a great many people don't half enjoy good weather. A few persons whose calling lies in that direction, poets, artists, writers of seasonable topics for the press and such like, give their minds up to it in a natural way, and some even open up all their senses to the enjoyment of Nature's triumphs.

But the average out-of-doors worker, the farmers' wives and daughters, the mass of village folk, and other persons who live near enough to the God-made world to enjoy it if they could and would, miss many of the delights which might be theirs. The weather is good when the housewife can dry her Monday's washing, or the farmer scythe his hay or plow out his corn. But weather that is good simply to live in and be happy, is not much thought of, and yet these perfect June days have no higher or more useful purpose than to make us contented, charmed with the beauty of the world, happy in the delights ministered to us by our finest senses, and grateful to God for it all.

The fresh verdure of the earth, the clean, new foliage of the trees, the flower-blossoms and fragrance, the soft air and lovely sky, and all that makes the world seem a new Paradise, are ours to enjoy.

How shall we do it? In the first place by thinking more about it. There is only one June in a year, and the graceful calendar makers have clipped one day off from that; a robbery which one can only condone by reflecting that they cut two of them off from February. Not a day of June should pass without thinking how lovely it is, rain or shine, cloudy or clear, hot or heavenly mild, early or late, that isn't a gem.

What surprises are here! The sun never rises in a city, it simply grows light. June in the city when people begin to fret about the hot weather, move into the back part of the house, and ask the neighbors where they are going to spend the summer.

It is only in the country that June is herself and at home. What mornings for workers who have vision as well as sight, ears for something besides the dinner-bell, and a nose that scents a sweet-brier bush clear across the meadow.

The old miracle of a "New created world," miraculous no longer because it has been occurring for thousands of years, and we have named the process "Law," by which the bleak, bare earth is clothed upon with beauty, is never felt so forcibly as now.

It is a time to seek out the old familiar wood-paths, to renew acquaintance with the brooks. All the summer delights, from lounging under a whispering tree to joining in the active sports of the season, ought now to be at their best. Holidays should be made on the slightest pretext, leave the dishes unwashed until after dark, and go out and see the sunset. Take a morning stroll among the roses or flower beds, there is no "nerve" equal to it. Go fishing, go and see your girl, take a walk with your own or some other girl's brother. The June moon shouldn't be permitted to waste her beams. In short, let your eyes, ears, nostrils, tongue and every source of sensibility know that June is here, and that she is worthy to be enjoyed.

RUMFORD FALLS.
 A Camp of Sons of Veterans is to be formed at Rumford Falls.

Silver Lake house at Roxbury pond was recently opened with a shore dinner and Andover band; John W. Newton, proprietor.

Hon John D. Bisbee and Naham Moore entertained the members of the old Buckfield Club at Oxford Bear camp on Mooseheneagantic lake from Saturday until Thursday.

The Sturgis deputies made a seizure of 400 gallons of whiskey Saturday evening. The liquor was found in a freight car in the yard of the Oxford Paper Co. The tags had all been torn from the packages.

Of the fifteen children of varying ages brought here last week, from the Little Wanderer's Home in Boston, all but two had been placed in homes on Thursday. The children were accompanied by three matrons and were visited at the Baptist vestry during the week.

Samuel Beausoliel tried to escape to his old home in Canada with his household goods and other belongings. His creditors got wind of the weather. His goods that were en route to Bryant's Pond returned, and Mr. Beausoliel will have to settle before he leaves.

Rev. Mr. Nannan of Denmark preached at the Episcopal church on Thursday evening, the sermon being in the Danish language. The service came as a great treat to the Danish population about Rumford for it is seldom they hear a sermon in the native tongue.

Mrs. Alastair Philbrook and Arthur Ladd got into trouble over a coat that Ladd claimed and Mrs. Philbrook said belonged to another man, and it was claimed that Ladd struck her several times. They had a hearing before Judge Johnson, who found Ladd the respondent guilty and fined him $100.00 and costs which he paid and was discharged.

A MIND OF HER OWN

By JOHN ROE GORDON

Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association

IT was August, 1781. Washington was hurrying southward to face Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, and the French fleet was closing in to cut off the escape of the British by sea. It was a well laid plan between the Americans and the French. As Washington left the Hudson with his army several craft left New England ports laden with the munitions and supplies which would be needed later on, and among them was Captain Elisha Hopewell's brig, Mary Ann of Salem. It will forever stand to the credit of that town that the contributions of food, blankets, shoes and hospital supplies sent in so free handed would have loaded the brig to the hatches had they been taken aboard. Room had to be reserved for the field-pieces and muskets which were to be taken on at Boston. While hundreds of willing hands were helping to stow cargo Captain Elisha went home to have a talk with his wife Nancy. She had made three trips with him to Havana and each time had undergone adventures and proved her nerve. This was a military charter instead of a trading voyage, however, and, as the run was to be coastwise and the British held New York, Nancy must be left behind. The captain had no doubt of this in his own mind, but still he would let her down easy. He stopped at the gate and looked around in a careless way, and he sauntered around the wood pile as if mentally calculating how long the fuel would last, and by and by he walked slowly into the kitchen. Nancy was peeling potatoes for supper. She looked up at the clock and then at her husband, and as he sat down with a grunt and remarked that it looked a little bit like a thunderstorm she paled away at a potato and said:

"Elisha Hopewell, something's the matter with you! Don't deny it, fur you can't fib to me!"

"I'm just a leetle bit nervous over what's ahead," he explained as he glanced at her out of the tail of his eye. "It shall do my best, of course, to get through to the Chesapeake, but from British to the Cape. I'm powerful glad, Nancy, that I shan't have you on board to fret about."

"Who said I wouldn't be aboard when the Mary Ann sailed?" she asked.

"Why, nobody; but of course you won't be. I'm chartered by the government, you know."

"That will do, Elisha. I know all about the charter, and it don't worry me a speck. When the brig goes, I go. I've had my mind made up fur two hull days."

Then, by Josh, the government will stop you!" he exclaimed.

"It may if it can, Elisha, but it's no use fur you to spunk up and wilt your collar over it. There's forty good reasons why I should go along and not one reason why I should stay home. By the time you've fed the pig, washed your face and combed your hair I'll have supper ready."

Nancy Hopewell was not a scold nor a woman of temper. She simply had a mind of her own—an unusually strong one. She thought things over before coming to conclusions, and when her mind was fully made up it was no use for Elisha to argue and protest. He sulked around on this occasion till supper was ready, and he might have sulked all through the meal had she not said:

"Elisha, don't be a baby. If you are captured I might as well be, and if you pull through I'll be with you. You know I can steer a trick, pull a rope and sight a sail as fur as the next one."

"I'm ag'in it," he replied; "but, bein' as you are sot about it, I s'pose you'll have to go."

That settled it. Nancy was aboard when the brig sailed down to Boston, and she was aboard when the arms were taken on and the voyage resumed. The British had heard of Washington's change of base, of course, and they would be sure that supplies would be sent from New England ports. As a matter of fact, every vessel which could be spared from their fleet in northern waters was sent to patrol the coast above and below New York, and it is a matter of record that they gathered up a goodly number of the supplies. When the Mary Ann had cleared Boston light the crew looked for her to head straight to sea for a hundred miles. That had been Captain Elisha's first idea, but as he broached it to his wife she said:

"Elisha, it's a good thing in war never to do what the enemy expects you to. If I was a Britisher I'd figger that you would run fur out to sea to get a good offing before you headed your bows, and so I'd keep most of my patrol boats from fifty to seventy-five miles off shore."

"By Josh, but there's something in that!" exclaimed the captain.

"If you keep near the coast," continued the wife, "you've got the chance of shoal water over a big craft; and there's more show fur squalls and fogs and dodgin', and if you find you can't git away from pursuit you can pile the Mary Ann up on the beach somewhere and keep the cargo out of the hands of the British."

"By Josh! By Josh!" whisperingly repeated Elisha as he gazed at her in admiration. "We'd all gone ahead and figgered on a long run to the east; and it ain't no plan at all compared to yours."

"Thank you, Elisha," she quietly replied as she turned to hunt for a button to sew on his vest.

After clearing Cape Cod the Mary Ann ran to the south and hugged the shore, and while off Chatham she got a sight of the topsails of a craft to the east which could only have been a British man-of-war beating back and forth in the track. When the point was rounded she laid her course for Vineyard sound. She was well up with Gay head when she sighted a small schooner which was beating into the sound, and as the two craft passed each other within biscuit toss the schooner's captain hailed:

"If you are bound south you'd better look out fur British cruisers. There's at least three of 'em to the east of Block Island, and they captured a Boston schooner yesterday."

The course of the Mary Ann was altered to the northwest, and she stretcheded across until Point Judith was sighted. Then she hugged the coast for thirty miles and laid a true course for Montauk. She was now in the mouth of Long Island sound, and it was the danger spot of the voyage. The run across would have been made at night, but early in the evening the wind died out, and the brig was compelled to anchor to prevent being carried away with the tide. A mist rose off the water to shut in the vision of the men on her decks, and, though the off watch turned in, Captain Hopewell's anxiety would not permit of sleep. At midnight he descended to the cabin to find his wife still awake. He was glad of it, as he wanted some one to talk to.

"Look here, Nancy," he began; "I don't like this; by Josh, if I do I won't get no breeze before sunrise, and d'ye know what we'll see the very first thing when the mist is blown away?"

"A Britisher about two miles off, I guess," she replied.

"That's it—that's jest what we'll see, and I want to know what we're goin' to do about it."

"Nuthin'!" tall Elisha. We can't make the wind blow."

"But he'll capture us!"

"Mebbe he will and mebbe he won't. I've thought I had a hen right by the tail, when she'd dodged to right or left and git away. It won't do no good to stew and fret. It's time to take medicine when you know something's ails ye. I'd turn in and git some sleep if I was you. You'll be called before day-break."

The captain followed her advice, and for the next four hours the brig was so quiet that a boat drifting past would have heard no sound. Then it was Nancy herself who called the sleeper.

"I'll be daylight in half an hour," she whispered, "and I want to tell ye something. I've been on deck fur the last half hour, and I'm sure there's a craft of some sort at anchor below us."

"I'll be a man-of-war, Nancy, a man-of-war!" he groaned.

"Most likely, but we needn't faint away on that account."

On reaching the deck the captain felt of the atmosphere, so to say. To a sailor or there were indications that a breeze off the land might soon be expected. It would be weak and puffy and not strengthen until sunrise, but it was his plan to take advantage of those puffs as far as he could. The pavils of the windlass were muffled, and as the hammer cable came slowly in there was little or no sound of weighing anchor. The tide was running up the sound, and tide and breeze sent the Mary Ann along for half an hour. Then of a sudden the breeze freshened, the mist began to disappear, and down in the south and about three miles away the crew of the brig caught sight of a British frigate.

"By Josh, but didn't I tell ye so?" exclaimed Captain Hopewell as his eyes lighted on the craft.

"Yes, Elisha, you did," replied Nancy, "but I don't see anything to holler about."

"And there goes a gun! And there goes a flag!" shouted the captain as he waved his telescope around.

"Waal, that don't hurt us any. Look here, Elisha, don't git excited and fall downstairs. The Britisher lays with his head to the south. He's got to up and come about before he can chase us, and we'll then have a lead of four miles."

It took the big craft a long time to get up her anchor and come about, and she took up the pursuit in a hopeless way. The Mary Ann increased her lead every minute, and her crew were full of rejoicing until they had rounded the point. Then they saw fair before them, coming up the coast, one of the ten gun brig which the British were making use of for shoal water patrolling. They were swift sailers, those brig, but in this case there was no need of pursuit. The Mary Ann had sailed right into the trap.

"By Josh, Nancy, but we're taken!" exclaimed Captain Hopewell as he caught sight of the stranger.

"Waal, don't have a fit over it," she replied.

"But the Mary Ann is lost, and we are prisoners!"

"We'll see about that. There goes a gun fur us to heave to. Fetch her into the wind, Elisha, and don't do no groanin' and lamentin'. No dog is ever dead till his tail has stopped waggin'. I'm goin' to believe that somethin' will turn up before we are carried into New York."

A quarter of an hour later an officer of the brig was on board. Having made a capture under the nose of a big frigate, as it were, he was in good humor.

The captured brig was taken into New York, and as a beginning the captor made a very foolish move, even though he may have been short of men. He ordered the sails of the Mary Ann to be carried in tow. Even Captain Hopewell was allowed to remain aboard, and the three Englishmen left behind were to take turns at the wheel and keep an eye on the prisoners. It was probably argued that without a firearm aboard, in broad daylight and within rifle shot of her captor, the Yankee crew would be as humble as rabbits. So they were for a time, and so they might have continued but for the captain's wife. She took an hour to think things over, and then she said to the captain, who sat in the cabin with her head in his hands:

"Elisha, are you a worm of a man?"

"What odds does it make whether I'm one or t'other?" he replied as he straightened up.

"It may make a good deal. How's the wind?"

"Nor-nor'west and fresh'nin' all the time."

"And we are keepin' close in?"

"Purty close. What odds does it make, though, about the wind or anything else? We are prisoners and on our way to New York."

"Elisha, I wish you wouldn't fret. Nobody ever got any good out of frettin'. If we are keepin' close in, and the breeze is growin' stronger, mebbe Amagansett shoal may have somethin' to do with us before we git past."

"But what can it do?" he petulantly queried.

"I've heard father say, and I've heard you and Captain Weatherly say, that a northwest wind and a fallin' tide makes Amagansett shoal a dangerous spot. That Britisher's drawin' eleven feet of water to our right. He may know about the shoal or he may not. Let's go on deck. Don't you even look cross eyed at anybody, but if anything happens be ready to spring fur your life."

"Nancy," solemnly replied Elisha as he laid a hand on her shoulder, "if you'd been born a man you'd have been George Washington, by Josh! And I've got hopes!"

Of the three men constituting the prize crew one was at the wheel, a second in the bow of the brig, and the third was making friends with the crew, with the object of getting them to enlist under the king. Amagansett shoal lay about three miles ahead, with a strong breeze blowing and a tumble of a sea getting up. Captain and wife had not been on deck five minutes when he whispered to her:

"Nancy, may I never eat another b'iled dinner in our kitchen in Salem if he ain't makin' straight fur the shoal!"

"But don't git excited, Elisha," she cautioned. "If anything's goin' to happen you both around like a hen with her head cut off and let everybody know it. Now listen to me. If the Britisher strikes the shoal he'll be in trouble at once. I want you to knock down the man at the wheel. Don't kill him, but lay him out so he'll keep quiet fur ten minutes or so. Then I'll grab the wheel, and you run forward. You can trust the men to see that chap talkin' to 'em, but you must git forwards and cut the towline. Don't kill anybody unless you have to."

"By Josh, Nancy! By J-o-s-h," he whispered as he began to tremble with excitement.

"Steady, Elisha! Keep your eye on the brig and be ready to act. The minin' the towline is cut we must make sail. I'll be right at the wheel, and you needn't do no worryin'."

Something in the looks of the captain and wife caught the eyes of the crew, and they began glancing around and about. At least three of them saw that the brig was making a straight course to cross the shoal, and they began to wonder if there was water enough. They were thus ready to act when the crisis came. Of a sudden the brig took the ground, and the shock brought down both her topgallant masts and made her decks a scene of confusion and danger.

"Now, Elisha—now!" shouted Nancy, and the words were hardly out of her mouth before the captain bounded on the man at the wheel and knocked him senseless by a blow on the jaw. Nancy was at hand to take the helm, and the programme she had mapped out was followed to the letter. The three men of the prize crew were prisoners, and the tow rope cut within a minute, and then as the crew, headed by the captain himself, sprang aloft and let fall the sails the Mary Ann drove off at a smart pace. Three or four guns boomed from the brig, and three or four solid shot plowed up the water, but the peril had passed, and the trader was safe. While she went flying southward her captor remained fast on the shoal, and the Mary Ann was one of the first to land on the shores of the Chesapeake. On her return to Salem the people would have it that Nancy Hopewell was a heroine, but in response to their cheers she quietly replied:

"La-me, but how people do git stirred up over nothin'! I wish they'd stop yellin' and let me git some pie made fur Sunday!"

The Essential in Grass Growing.
 Harrowing is one great essential in preparing a seed bed for the tiny grass and clover seed. The writer does not remember ever seeing timothy or clover sitting up on clods half the size of his fist making much progress toward a hay crop. Harrow and reharrow until the soil is like dust. Then and then only the seed bed is fit to yield a profitable crop.—J. D. Detrich.
